

ABSTRACT

Generally, a method and apparatus for processing a substrate. In one embodiment, the method provides a first relative motion between at least a first substrate and a polishing material. A second relative motion is provided between at least a second substrate and the polishing material. The changing in direction of the relative motion extends the interval between conditioning procedures used to return the polishing material to a state that produces uniform polishing results.